KETCHIKAN, ALASKA Near the southern-most tip of Alaska's panhandle sits a sleepy town with a very dramatic title. Squeezed between mountain and sea, it is hard to imagine how the town got the Tlingit Indian name, Ketchikan – "Thundering Wings of an Eagle." For the rugged soul that climbs 3,000 ft. Deer Mountain that overlooks the town, the mystery is quickly solved. Ketchikan is a small town; its long main street skirts a waterfront built on pilings over the sea. Short side streets and steep wooden stairways lead to residential areas on the bluff above. Don't miss the Totem Cultural Heritage Center which features the largest collection of original, unaltered totem poles in Alaska. Ketchikan is noted for the world's largest collections of totem poles, an interesting and important Indian art form. Dall Island is the 28th largest island in the USA with only 20 residents on the island. Alaska Natives are known to have inhabited coastal caves on the island two to three thousand years ago.
